PG Does East County

The hitherto Unknown Adventures of the Most Noble Knight Errant
Phillip Giannangeli

with artistic renderings by Greg Eichelberger

My editor gave me my walking papers the other day. A "Hit the road, Jack" (Phil in this case) ultimatum. Get off your duff and see what's going on out in the real world. Smell the roses, drink the coffee, and flag down a wary motorist or two when you get lost and need to find out where you are. And for Pete's sake, don't step in anything that's hardening on the sidewalk like you did last time I sent you out.

Mr. Saint is telling me unambiguously that I'd better hit (and step very carefully along) the roads of East County. What's a guy supposed to do when his editor lays down the law?

He hits the road.

So, El Cajon, Santee, Lakeside, Lemon Grove, Spring Valley and La Mesa, here I come. I'm going to drive your roads, walk your streets, wander your byways, and stroll your boulevards. And I'm going to look down to make sure I don't step in anything. I'll cruise your malls, sample your eateries, gaze at your sunrises, languish in your middays and watch lazily as your days slip into night. If that isn't enough, I'm going to try to find out some provocative stuff about your community and who is responsible for varnishing the truth.

First I'll need to be organized. I'll need a plan, a blueprint to work from. I've never had to do this kind of writing before but I'm sure fairness, consistency and even-handedness will be expected of me.

Unfortunately, that's not the way I work and that's going to make this project doubly hard.

I'll guess I'll have to check my wallet copy of the "Journalist's Creed of Ethic" like real newspaper people say they do when they need guidance on tricky moral issues. I'm not going to pull a Joe Kline faux pas here. Most importantly of all, though, I'll need good shoes. And a hat.

If my plan sounds a little like Don Quixote, forget it. I never heard of him, never read Cervantes, don't know anything about it. This is simply going to be this writer's gallant attempt to accede to his editor's capricious edict to hit the road.

I'll talk to people. Ordinary people. Helpful people. One source of information for each city could be that city's historical society. Those people should be willing to talk wouldn't you think? I'll check the phone book. See if I can meet with someone or at least talk to someone on the phone. That way I can work some good stuff into this piece.

Let's see. El Cajon, check. Lakeside, check. Spring Valley, check. La Mesa, check. Lemon Grove. Lemon Grove? No Lemon Grove listing. Santee, no listing either. Well, four out of the six have historical societies listed in the phone book. I'm sure Lemon Grove and Santee have some history too. I wonder why they're not trying to preserve it. Or if they are, why they're not telling anyone about it.

So, my final words before starting this awesome adventure are: The proof is in the pudding. The tough get going when the going gets tough. I love you, man!

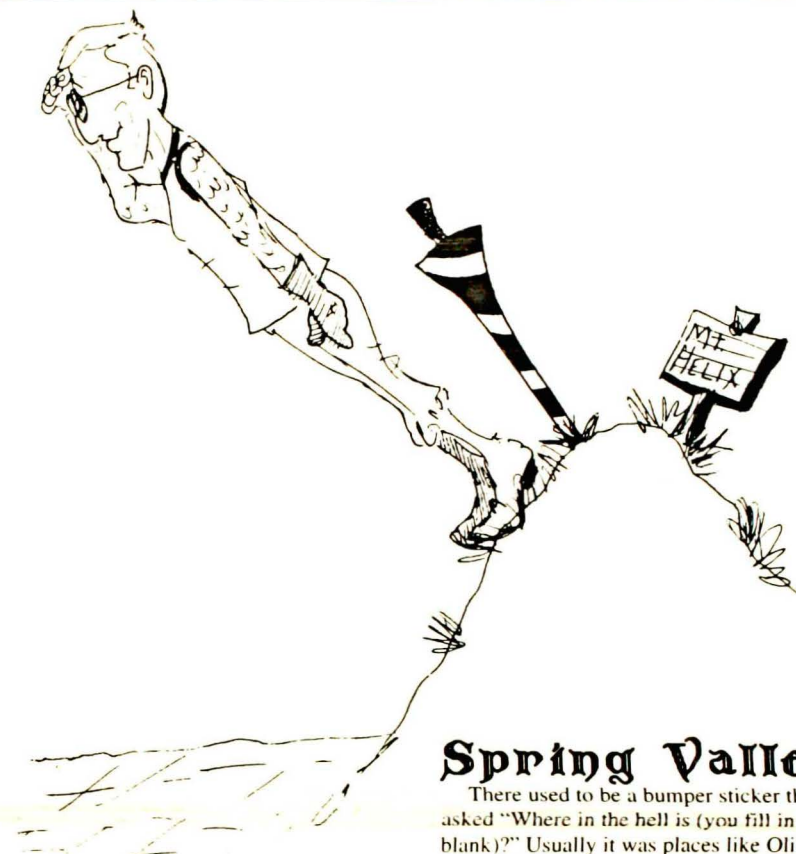

Look out East County, here I come!

Lemon Grove

I have a special fondness for Lemon Grove. It has nothing to do with lemons or groves, neither of which I saw much of when I lived in Lemon Grove years ago. Nor did it have anything to do with the huge lemon strategically located in the heart of Lemon Grove.

No, for me Lemon Grove was a time in my life when I was foot-loose and fancy-free. If you don't

Spring Valley

There used to be a bumper sticker that asked "Where in the hell is (you fill in the blank)?" Usually it was places like Olivenhein or Jacumba.

I know where Spring Valley is, but I still like asking where in the hell is Spring Valley? Or at least where is the heart of Spring Valley? Or, does Spring Valley have a heart? It does, I'm sure, so don't think that I'm implying anything by that flippant comment. I can see I have much to do "hitting the road to Spring Valley."

Checking my trusty Thomas Brothers — not too old an edition — I find that much of what is called Spring Valley looks to be uninhabited. There are clusters of people and businesses around certain areas, but there are also some wide open spaces.

Spring Valley seems to be a place where you need a car, not necessarily a fancy car, but a car that runs. One that can get you places. Unlike some of the other East County communities, I saw few bicycles as I traveled the streets of Spring Valley.

Driving down one thoroughfare in Spring Valley, I noticed a sign for the Swap Meet. Could it be the same swap meet I went to some 20 years ago?

Sure is! Same winding road down into the swap meet area; same broken asphalt. I wonder if people are still trying to unload their discards for a profit just like I used to do. Those matching lava lamps and 8-track tapes I sold back then sure were a bargain.

I was still having trouble getting a handle on Spring Valley when I got in touch with Jim Van Meter from the Spring Valley Historical Society. Jim and his guard dog, Paco, took care of that.

They toured me through the old Bancroft House and the grounds surrounding it. Jim informed me that Spring Valley was made up of 10 communities, some well-known, some not so. For the curious, they are (in no particular order): Casa de Oro, Brookside, La Presa, Mount Helix, Rancho San Diego, Sweetwater Springs, San Diego Valley Estates, Dictionary Hill, Calavo Gardens and Bancroft. I was beginning to

Personal comments of Mayor Mary Sessom

I usually count to 10 before I enter the intersection at Massachusetts and Central when the light turns green. Too often, I have seen drivers deliberately run the red light. I assume that they have weighed the consequences of running a red light against the time spent waiting for it to turn green. A police officer generally won't be there to give the offender a ticket. There are more severe consequences than a ticket. There are car accidents. Unfortunately, it is the innocent driver legally entering the intersection who bears the brunt of the illegal act.

The Lemon Grove City Council is looking at a program designed to deter traffic signal violations. It is called the Red Light Camera - Automated Intersection Enforcement program. Basically, a camera is located at targeted intersections. If a car enters the intersection after the light has turned red, a series of pictures is taken. The police can then issue citations based on the pictures. The legality of this concept has recently been approved by the California State legislature. Currently, the cities of El Cajon and Poway are experimenting with the red light cameras.

There would be no start up costs for this program in Lemon Grove. All costs of installing, maintaining and processing the violations would be paid out of the fines collected. However, there is a price for everything. It may not be paid in dollars and cents but it will be collected.

There are those who argue that this program is an invasion of one's right to privacy. Taken a step farther, can Big Brother be far away? On the opposite side are those who believe that folks who break the law have no expectation of a right to privacy. Accidents, from those who run red lights, average two-a-month. Would the city be negligent if it didn't make all reasonable efforts to halt the causes of these accidents? And, aren't we getting the effect of another traffic police officer without the additional costs?

These arguments are going to be bandied about over the next few weeks. During that time, city staff will be collecting additional statistics and information about all aspects of this program. It would be helpful to your elected representatives if we knew where our citizens stood on this program. Call or write us at city hall with your ideas.

more to Spring Valley than I originally thought.

When I finally left Jim and Paco, I knew more about Spring Valley than I did about the town I grew up in. For instance, Jim told me that Babe Ruth hunted duck at Sweetwater Lake in 1927 and the reason it's called Dictionary Hill is because calling it Encyclopedia Hill (the purchase of a set of encyclopedias got you a lot on this hill) was too big a mouthful.

I heard the story of two young Chinese lovers smuggled out in the dead of night so they could remain together and how olives replaced corn as the cash crop of preference. And finally, Jim told me to look out for the Spring Valley of tomorrow. According to Jim, when the new transportation corridors are complete, Spring Valley won't be just a repository of the past but it will be the beacon to the future of East County. Paco agreed with him.

El Cajon

The distinctive "ding, ding, ding" of the crossing gates coming down on Bradley in the pre-dawn hours signals the beginning of another day in El Cajon. Detractors may find things to carp about, but an early morning in El Cajon isn't one of them. El Cajon could probably end its budget deficit if it could figure out how to package and sell those El Cajon mornings. Crisp air, the sun coming up over the Cuyamacas, a drive down Broadway. Whoops.

I wasn't going to mention Broadway, but since it came up in such an innocent way, why not? From the western side of the valley to the eastern end of the city, Broadway has the longest string of unsynchronized traffic lights anywhere in the U.S. Perhaps the whole of the civilized world. One of the more challenging pursuits for El Cajonians is to try to travel that stretch of road without having to stop at a single traffic signal.

Some lucky driver accomplished that feat back in the late '70s, but since then, no one has even come close. Recently one driver did manage to go through all the lights without stopping, but he was driving a van full of illegal aliens and he ran about half of the lights before the police caught him. Legitimately, no one has been successful for over two decades.

But alas, I come here to speak good of El Cajon, not to complain about the lack of intelligence in programming its traffic signals.

El Cajon, "the box" (too bad it doesn't translate into something more appealing like the "gem stone" or the "mother lode"), is the center of East County. Bigger than its neighbors, this box has a number of surprises tucked away inside it and its past is rich.

It was the home of one of the most famous western artists ever, Olaf Wieghorst, and it was also home to the early Fletchers. The "Corners" (Main and Magnolia) was its center for a long time. Will be again if redevelopment ever catches up with its promise. El Cajon has a thriving indoor mall, potentially the best theater in the whole region, and it can lay claim to the most rotund government official in the county.

There's early-morning mall-walking and the decades-old tradition of friendly breakfasts at Kozak's and Perry's. Although there's no formal age limit for those morning mallers (the mall manager might discourage any early morning teen malling), there probably is one for the breakfast crowds at the local eateries.

Several years ago, El Cajon decided it wanted to show the world (or at least the rest of the county) that it was a place of harmony and compassion. That's when the annual Friendship Festival was born. A weekend in September was set aside for people from all over to come to the city hall complex to fill up on knowledge, understanding, respect, customs and the special talents of various inhabitants.

Oh, and fajitas too.

To say the annual event has been successful would be an understatement. Groups from all around the county come together for fun and friendship in the city that still that still considers itself the Friendly City of El Cajon.

La Mesa

El Cajon's box translation is easily upstaged by La Mesa's more charming, "the table." La Mesa's place settings (get it, table?) and the people seated around this Spanish translation are in sharp contrast to its younger neighbor to the north, Santee.

Where one might be hard-pressed to find anything really old in Santee, no such difficulty exists in La Mesa.

There's a lot of old stuff in La Mesa. It's been around for a good long while and so have many of its citizens. That is not to say La Mesa is stodgy or anything like

Little Darlings partners seek transfer of alcohol license ownership

by Cheryl Cohen

Let's say you're in the mood to go to Little Darlings in Lemon Grove to see some dancers and perhaps have a bite (of lunch!) while you're there. Will you be able to order a beer? If you're between the ages of 18 and 21, will you be able to get in at all? Will your eyes take in ALL the scenery, or will your southern hemispheric vision be impeded by a veil of clothing?

It all depends on whom you ask.

According to the Sept. 26 edition of the Lemon Grove Review, the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control (ABC) has received a change in ownership application from a company called The In Spot that wishes to serve alcoholic beverages at 8290 Broadway in Lemon Grove. But wait! Isn't that the location of Little Darlings?

Little Darlings just stopped serving alcohol to procure totally nude status, open to 18-year-old dancers and customers. Are they planning to serve up distilled spirits with underwear chasers to the 21-and-older crowd and revert to topless status?

Becky, a night manager of the dance club, said that since they have stopped serving alcohol (a requirement of having totally nude entertainment), business has suffered greatly. All indications pointed to "probably having to go back to topless" in order to recoup lost business.

Barely two months ago, federal courts upheld adults' rights to patronize a nude club over the objections of city government. Since then, Lemon Grove's city council has been conducting weekly closed sessions to research options to close the club down.

It's only a matter of time, anyway. The state Route 125/94 interchange is going to barrel right through the spot where a wheelchair ramp now sits to provide disability access for the Darling dancers. Although this highway project won't be completed until the year 2002, demolition of the present building is imminent. Still, it leaves plenty of time to further aggravate the more conservative elements of Lemon Grove's administration and populace.

Little Darlings General Manager Tawnia Hubler said she doesn't know why the liquor license's ownership is changing.

"It's probably just a change in ownership of the license itself," she said. "You know, just a formality. I'd say you can get more information if you talk to our attorney."

Maybe, but attorney Dale Manicom would rather talk about other subjects, such as the wheelchair ramp that the city made the club install in case it ever has a nude entertainer who is wheelchair-bound.

Manicom said the notice in the Review was placed to comply with an ABC requirement that businesses inform the public of any changes in stockholders or ownership. There has been some movement of stock and "that is that," he said.

Even Manicom agrees that there is a lot of confusion among people trying to keep track of the business' name changes. The parent company, Déjà Vu, was (as of Aug. 16, 1996) doing business at the Lemon Grove location as Little Darlings. Before a fire completely destroyed the building a couple of years ago, it was known as Nite Life East.

"The In Spot" is the business name now appearing on all references to the present lawsuit with the city, even though the sign out front still reads "Little Darlings." In the phone book, it's listed under "Déjà Vu."

The ownership issue of this club is much more complex than the "Hundreds of Pretty Girls And

One Ugly One" painted on the side of the limousine usually parked on the side of the familiar pink building. According to the ABC, the latest change is a major stock transfer (98 percent) from one of the original shareholders, Helen R. Gombes, to the sole shareholder of a corporation called CB & DM Entertainment — Douglas Marks — with the remaining shares (2 percent) staying in the names of William and Norma McClelland, the original owners of the club.

The liquor license has been in the name of In Spot, Inc. since the city's incorporation in 1977, but was doing business as Nite Life

East when it temporarily surrendered it because of the fire in 1995. The ABC sees no relation of the In Spot, Inc. to Déjà Vu (whose president is listed as Don Kronz) on its license history. ABC staff also said that corporations are not required to report all of their fictitious business names.

The attorney balked about the type of ownership changes that prompted the new ABC notice. After extended silence on any details about the corporation's stockholder names or business structure, Manicom volunteered that the individuals behind the word "stockholder" do not want their names divulged in public.

"They don't want to deal with things like obscene phone calls!" he said. Manicom also said the club is trying to work with the city of Lemon Grove to reach some sort of accord.

Despite the possession of a liquor license, the club's post-fire incarnation voluntarily stopped serving alcohol in order to comply with the legal requirements of totally nude entertainment, he said.

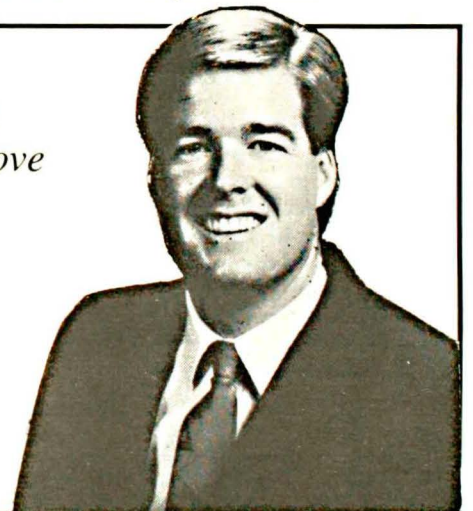

Keeping the license even if they do not use it leaves the owners' options open should they choose to revert back to topless-only entertainment.

Commentary

by Paul Treske

Lately, as I view the world around me, I seem to have many more questions than answers. Here are a few, in no particular order, and totally without answers.

* When is OJ Simpson going to locate the real murderer of his wife and Ron Goldman? I remember that he pledged to devote himself to that task once he, himself, was cleared. Perhaps he expects to find the answer on the golf course.

* Who are these "East Coast lawyers" the anti-Prop. 211 opponents keep talking about? Are they worse than our own home-grown West Coast variety?

* Why does the company that produces Snackwell cookies keep making those dreadful, grating commercials with the frightened clerk and three horrible laughing women? Those commercials have replaced "ring-around-the-collar" as TV's worst, but they keep showing them.

* When is the House Ethics Committee ever going to actually deal with the Newt Gingrich case? Does the word "whitewash" mean anything to anyone?

* Who really gives a damn about the British royal family?

* Are the investigators of the TWA Flight 800 tragedy ever going to give us an explanation? The longer they wait, the more outrageous conspiracy theories we will be hearing. Next thing, we'll have an Oliver Stone film on the subject.

* Whatever happened to Jack Kemp as the spearhead of Bob Dole's campaign? We barely see him anymore and when we do, he just keeps repeating "I am the quarterback."

* From where do they get all of those human social disasters who appear regularly on TV talk shows? Is there an agency somewhere that keeps a list of those idiots?

* Why do all soap opera marriages end in divorce? Yes, I admit that I've taken to browsing them since retirement, and I have this one burning question: is divorce really that titillating?

* And finally, why does the name and picture of Heidi Fleiss keep appearing in the newspapers and TV? I wonder who it is that thinks that she is so very interesting and newsworthy?

Hugh Grant gets deep in 'Extreme Measures'

by Betty Jo Tucker

If you were paralyzed, what would you be willing to do to regain your mobility? Or suppose someone you love became paralyzed from a spinal injury. Is there anything you wouldn't do to help that person recover?

"Extreme Measures," a medical thriller based upon Michael Palmer's popular novel, explores this moral dilemma through the eyes of Dr. Guy Luthan (Hugh Grant). Luthan is a physician on duty in one of New York City's busiest trauma rooms. When a homeless man dies from bizarre symptoms, Luthan begins an unauthorized investigation into this death. When he discovers a private medical research program using the homeless as nerve donors for paraplegics, Luthan realizes that his career, his friendships, even his life are in grave danger.

Revealing considerable depth in this role, Grant ("Four Weddings and a Funeral," "Nine Months") finally proves he can do serious drama as well as comedy. (His previous dramatic efforts in such films as "An Awfully Big Adventure" and "Sense and Sensibility" left much to be desired.)

"Extreme Measures" is definitely Grant's film, in spite of another fine performance by veteran scene-stealer Gene Hackman ("Crimson Tide," "Get Shorty"). Hackman's classy Jekyll/Hyde-like portrayal of Dr. Lawrence Myrick, a distinguished medical

Even though we've seen movies with similar plots before (remember the superb film version of Robin Cook's "Coma," starring Michael Douglas and Genevieve Bujold?), "Extreme Measures" holds our interest and takes us on a suspenseful cinematic ride. An elevator ride involving Luthan and an F.B.I. agent (played with stoic deliberation by the underrated David Morse from "St. Elsewhere" and "The Crossing Guard") stands out as one of the most thrilling scenes in this involving film.

Another supporting cast member, Sarah Jessica Parker ("First Wives' Club," "If Lucy Fell") also shows her considerable dramatic range as Nurse Trammel, Luthan's friend and confidante.

Some surprising little touches in this film deserve mentioning because they help make a rather far-fetched concept seem more believable. A fly crawling on a paralyzed patient's arm, a doorway bursting open in a deserted alleyway, the frantic emergency room chaos at the beginning of the film—all examples of top-notch filmmaking. And the dark music by Danny Elfman ("Batman") creates a special tension needed for each scene.

As directed by Michael Apted ("Gorillas in the Mist," "Blink"), "Extreme Measures" lacks satisfactory technical explanations for the medical research depicted, but it offers enough excitement to make up for this oversight.

Prognosis: "Extreme Measures" should be a big success for Castle Rock Entertainment.

Letters to the Editor

Exciting reading

Your recent article, "May Your Name Be Inscribed in The Book of Life," [Sept. 12] by Joe Naiman and Steven Saint was exciting reading for people of all faiths or none. The history, events, and rites surrounding the celebration of the Jewish New Year were informative, well researched, and colorful.

The same can be said for several of your previous articles that have appeared in your newspaper this past spring and fall. There was a remarkable series during the Easter Season, "Easter Week Revisited," [April 2] and another cover-page feature at the time of the Baha'i New Year (Naw Ruz, March 21), [March 19], with a heart-warming heading and photo of one of the Baha'i Shrines in Haifa, Israel.

These articles featuring the Holy Day Celebrations of different religions were filled with interesting bits of information many of us were unaware of, and scholarly.

We take this opportunity to applaud your effort and feel confident that the result can be one of mutual respect, better understanding between people of differing beliefs, and unity.

Corporate influence out of elections!

Bob Dole keeps telling us, "We can't trust government." Who then can we trust, the corporations or Wall St? Without government to protect us, we are at the mercy of the interests whose only concern is maximizing profit regardless of the consequences on peoples lives.

Just as unions are the only way workers can compete with avaricious corporations, so government is the only way the people can protect themselves from faceless, heartless multi-national corporations and financiers.

Just as unions can become corrupt, government can become corrupt. However, we need them both. If they have faults, it is up to us, through the democratic process, to correct them. The campaign to weaken government plays right into the hands of corporations who want the unfettered right to exploit us.

Unfortunately the same multi-national corporations which work so hard to turn us against both unions and government also spend hundreds of millions corrupting government. Under our present election system candidates are dependent on corporate contributions. It is virtually impossible to win without them.

The very first thing we must concentrate on is taking control of government from the corporations. This election we have a chance to take a giant step in reducing corporate influence on elections by voting for Prop. 208, the California Political Reform Initiative. This initiative was put on the ballot by four reliable groups who have nothing to gain for themselves.

If you want more information about Prop. 208, write AARP 980-9th St., Sacramento, CA. or call me at 697-3222

Let's exercise our public character

Recently National Public Radio presented a thought-provoking analysis of two major character types we possess. (1) Private character is involved with my kids, my residence, my health, my career ... that is to say, everything having to do with my private life and personal success, while (2) public character involves each individual having a sense of responsibility for his or her community ... that is to say, being willing to take personal time and action in building an ever-better community/environment for all Americans, children, adults, elderly.

Both characters are essential. Private character most often takes care of itself. A problem arises when public character is underdeveloped. This is because American democracy demands more than just our voting behavior, important as that is. Democracy also requires that we inform ourselves on all steps we can take that will strengthen a more livable and supporting community for all of us.

Fortunately, public character, like our muscles, grows with use. We will soon have an opportunity to exercise our public character ... to give it a vital community-supporting workout. The name and aim of the workout is: libraries!

But first: why is a library so important to a democracy? It is because it is one of the few institutions where we can cross the threshold to almost complete freedom. In a library we are free to examine all kinds of materials ... materials that can help us answer both personal and public questions. And, no one says to us, "You've spent enough time in the sports section ... you better get over there and read some history now." This is because a library is truly a democratic institution. It is worth assisting, enhancing, supporting, caring deeply about...because it makes every community a better place to live!

Your library's budget has been grossly squeezed in recent years. The causes: economic slowing, lowered property values, government competition for existing funds. But now we have a chance to give our own branch or community library a much needed boost ... one that can help our libraries get beyond that years-long budgetary drought.

How? Well ... recently, 18 cities and unincorporated areas of San Diego County approached the San Diego County Board of Supervisors, requesting that Proposition A: "For Community and Branch Libraries" be put on the Nov. 5, 1996 ballot. The Board of Supervisors agreed. They agreed that Proposition A: Will provide a quarter-cent sales tax increase for a time-limited period of five years for the support of every branch and community library throughout the whole of San Diego County.

The beauty of this library-booster is that each city or community retains the entire amount of this sales tax for its own local library. Excepted is: 1 and 1/2 percent going for administration.

So, let us exercise our public character. Let us inform ourselves. Let us vote yes on Proposition A on Nov. 5, 1996.

See you at the polls ... You'll know me ... I'll be wearing my public character!

Things to Do!

Oktoberfest to be celebrated this weekend

Fall is officially here, evidenced by Oktoberfest celebrations around the East County this weekend.

La Mesa

In La Mesa, festivities will commence at 5 p.m. tomorrow and run through the weekend, ending at 7 p.m. on Sunday. Downtown streets will be closed off and more than 300 booths will be set up, selling arts and crafts, commercial items and food. A separate kids' area will be provided offering carnival rides, face painting and an astro jump.

The beer garden will be open until 10 p.m. and a variety of non-stop entertainment is scheduled. Admission is free.

Because of limited parking in the downtown area, Oktoberfest organizers encourage the public to ride the San Diego Trolley's East Line to the event. Riders should get off at the La Mesa Boulevard trolley stop, which stops at the corner of Spring Street and La Mesa Boulevard right in the middle of Oktoberfest activities. For further information, call 465-7700 and select option #1.

El Cajon

El Cajon's German American Societies will present its traditional German Oktoberfest from noon until 10 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday, and again on Oct. 12 and 13 at 1017 S. Mollison Ave. The event is open to the public with free admission.

Festival attractions will include authentic German food such as bratwurst, ox-on-the spit, sauerkraut and red cabbage and a beer garden. The Bavarian Beer Garden Band with Karl and Stephan will perform inside the clubhouse beginning at 8 p.m. Saturday and again on Oct. 12. There also will be games, contests, craft booths, folk-singing and dancing, raffle prizes and a shooting gallery. For more information, call 442-6637.

Santee/Lakeside

The Santee Elks Lodge will sponsor an Oktoberfest celebration from 11 a.m. - 6 p.m. on Saturday at the lodge at 11633 Woodside Ave. The celebration will include a German band, food booths and a beer garden. There is no admission fee. Call 561-9200 for details.

Companies to join heart walk

Tie one on! Then tie another one on! Sneakers, that is. That's what 200 company team leaders are urging their coworkers to do on Saturday during the annual Healthy Choice American Heart Walk. The Walk starts at 8 a.m. with registration and continental breakfast available from 6:30 - 8 a.m. Now in its fifth year, it is expected to raise a record $110,000 for the lifesaving research and preventive education programs of the American Heart Association. The event is distinguished from other walking events by virtue of its corporate and employee participation.

Balboa Park will play host to the event, with the start/finish line on the expansive lawn in front of the War Memorial Building at the northernmost end of the Zoo parking lot at Park Blvd., and Zoo Place. Teams from East County include: Action/Dumpster Rental; Buck Knives; El Cajon Police Dept.; El Cajon Valley High School; Grossmont Hospital Cardiac Rehab; Home Depot; Household finance; La Mesa Internal Medical Group; Olive Garden Restaurant; Paradise Valley Hospital-Health Promotion Dept.; San Diego Hebrew Home; Scripps Cardiac Rehab; and the Southern Indian Health Council.

that. La Mesa is mature. La Mesa is adult. Can't say, like in the car commercial, that La Mesa is not your dad's city anymore. No, La Mesa is still your dad's city. And your mom's, too.

But even with its adulthood, La Mesa never seems like a community that is adverse to breaking new ground. Drive down Fletcher Parkway if you don't believe that. But like the admonition that parents are always giving their youngsters, La Mesa is a city that looks before it leaps.

Downtown La Mesa has a special appeal to it. It looks like it came right out of the Forties and Fifties. It's unscarred by a Wal-Mart or an Incredible Universe. You'll find a camera shop that's been there for 50 years and a yardage store for the hard-to-find fabrics and lace.

These and others are stores with histories, real ones, and they add charm to downtown La Mesa. And you can cross La Mesa Blvd. without fearing for your life — don't try that in Santee. People in La Mesa will chat with you. It is like returning to the bygone decade of the '50s, and La Mesans like that era so much they really do return to the '50s in street celebrations from time to time.

La Mesa's passion for the past took a unique turn recently when a couple of members of its city council decided that a return to the good old days of wild west justice might be in order. Instead of strapping on the old six-gun or carrying the odd rifle, these two city council members recommended that people in La Mesa be allowed to carry concealed weapons. Then La Mesans could walk the streets free from fear and the only tip-off that they weren't to be messed with might be a slight bulge somewhere on the La Mesan's personage.

Cooler heads on the council and in the city prevailed, though, and today you can walk the streets of La Mesa without worrying about who is or isn't packing. And you shouldn't notice too many unsightly bulges either. La Mesa remains a place where it's damn near impossible to tell a La Mesan from a Santee or a Lemon Grover because of an unsightly bulge. Any bulges seen in La Mesa indicate other problems.

While El Cajon has its alcohol-free Friendship Festival, La Mesa has its lager-laden Oktoberfest. This weekend, in fact, La Mesa will become old Bavaria with its streets cut off to traffic, its police strolling the boulevard (and beer garden), and its vendors keyed up for profit. For a city the size of La Mesa, Oktoberfest is an astonishing success. Some pretty smart people must be behind it.

Santee

As I walk the streets of Santee, I notice a lot of kids. Kids riding bikes, kids skating, kids just hanging out.

Santee seems to have a lot of kids. They gather at places like the Santee 8 movie house, some strip malls and on certain street corners. I wonder if there's such a thing as a typical Santee kid? I'm going to stop one and ask. I've got my tape recorder handy (no big ugly micro-er you might want to define that.

Another discovery I made on Santee streets is that they are crowded. And the drivers on those streets have a held-back, restrained look. A look that says I'd die to go 10 miles an hour faster. You can sense that they'd be going a lot faster if those speeding tickets Sheriff's deputies dispense didn't cost so much. Especially those cheesy citations issued on Mast Blvd.

Driving Mission Gorge during rush hour (when state Route 52 has disgorged all its drivers into Santee) is quite a trip, too — not in the sense that it's unusual or different, but in the traditional sense (meaning you'd better pack your bags for it.) You might be able to get in a little picnic time when you're battling rush hour traffic in this lovely city.

All in all, though slow and sometimes clogged, the roads, streets and byways of Santee deserve a pretty good re-view.

Santee's visage is one of newness. Everywhere you look, almost everything seems new. Nothing in Santee looks very old. I think there's a city ordinance calling for the removal of any building older than yesterday. Town Center, where some major businesses are located, and the brand-spanking-new trolley terminal won't be put in any historical registries for quite a while.

Neither will City Hall, a mall setting with a tranquil grace about it. And if a waterway can ever look new, Santee Lakes is the one. Santee is the growing kid of East County.

Lakeside

Looking for the city of Lakeside was an impossible task. I drove Lakeside Road for a long distance and couldn't find the city. Turned around and tried again. Still no city.

I soon found out why: Lakeside doesn't exist.

There is a place called Lakeside, but no city. I had expected a gun-toting mayor and perhaps a city council that would tie their horses up at the meeting hall. No such reality.

I guess the people of Lakeside deal with politics and politicians differently than some of the rest of the East County communities. They don't allow politicians to get a foothold by establishing any kind of cityhood. Should Lakeside ever become a city in the formal sense of the word, though, I bet the mayor is going to be plain-spoken and from pretty hardy stock. May not strap on a sidearm, but I'll bet she/he will probably have to know how to ride a horse.

I must admit that when I was told to hit the road and do a piece on East County, Lakeside was the place I knew the least about. The previous paragraph should have hinted at that. I've been in Lakeside perhaps 10 times in my life. I've driven through or past it a number of times and I have a couple of friends who live there. But I never really went to Lakeside or thought I'd ever write anything about Lakeside.

Now, I'm faced with matching my limited images of Lakeside with the reality of Lakeside. Only one way to do that.

Lakeside's center city is on Maine Avenue. I know that because I went into the pharmacy located on a corner there and a nice clerk told me so. She even directed me to the building that houses the Historical Society. Sizing me up, she felt it necessary to draw a map for the block and a half journey. Smart lady.

Inside the church housing the Historical Society, I was greeted by Shirley Anderson. Shirley offered me the "two-bit" tour of the building. I thanked her and told her that's all my editor budgeted for these excursions.

One of the first things Shirley wanted to clear-up was the misconception about plumbing in Lakeside. She pointed to two open doors where I could clearly see toilets in each room. She informed me that there was, indeed, indoor plumbing in this building as there was in most of Lakeside. So much for any out-house imagery I had.

Shirley toured me through the old building. There was the 100-year-old organ, one of two in the whole country (yes, country) and beautiful quilts that Lakesiders craft for fund raising events.

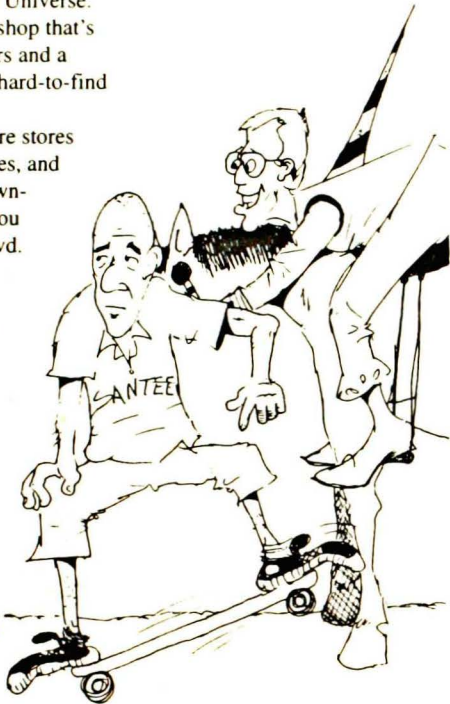

She offered to sell me an organ (smaller than the other one, but older) and she even let me ring the church bell. I don't know if that's a common practice in Lakeside, but it was fun and it sure was loud. Probably alerted everyone in town that some non-Lakesidian was in their midst.

As I was leaving, Shirley slipped me an application to join the Lakeside Historical Society. Said I didn't need to be a resident either. What a saleslady.

That's it! My feet are sore, my horse is sunburned. I'm East-Countied out. I know I've left out tons of stuff about East County that should have been included. I probably made glaring mistakes, too. But I'd really like to get back to writing about stuff I know: stupid people, teenagers, my various run-ins with an unforgiving universe, and sex. Sex always sells newspapers.

East County, you're more than I imagined, better than I thought, too complex to lump into one category, and a fine place to call home.

Now, Mr. Saint, can I please get off the road?

phone to shove in anyone's face, though) and my number two pencil has a fine point. Let's see what happens.

Me: "Hi. I'm doing a story on Santee and I wonder if you could answer some questions for me?"

Kid: Yeah, man. Am I going to be on TV or something? That'd be cool.

Me: "Well, no. This is going to be a special feature in the Santee Star newspaper. I'm sure you've heard of the Santee Star newspaper.

Kid: Newspaper? I don't read newspapers. Too geeky. If you wanna take my picture, I'll hang. But not too long. Gotta go before my board grows hair. Heh, heh, heh. Heard there are some cool Betty's over at the Trolley stop. Heh, heh, heh.

So much for Santee kids. I must, in the interest of honest reporting (I checked my wallet-sized ethics card), tell the readers that the interview you just read was a composite interview. The Kid exists, but he's not real. I wouldn't want to have to return any Pulitzer that might come my way for such a minor alteration of truth. I must report though that the Santee kids I met seem to be pretty normal youngsters, howev-

It's time to start remembering the dream...
